Noncanonical Writings And New Testament Interpretation

In this reader-friendly guide, Markus Bockmuehl offers a sympathetic account of the ancient "Jewish" and "Christian" religious texts, especially the so-called 'non-canonical' texts, by focusing on how they were used or functioned in Early Judaism and Early Christianity. The contributors are biblical scholars who have chosen one or more Jewish or Christian apocryphal or pseudepigraphical texts, with the aim of describing their ancient functions in their emerging social settings. These show the fluidity of the notion of scripture in the early centuries of the Church and in Judaism. The volume begins by offering an introduction to the field of non-canonical religious texts and then moves through the fourteen chapters, written and visual sources of the ancient world are investigated and explored by scholars, specialising in those fields of study, to engage Writing Jude Charles Kimball 1994-03-01 This work presents an inductive, exegetical analysis of Jesus' message and teachings as an engagement with the presence of Jesus in a diverse age. The book explores his life, message, and social context. No ancient text was created in a vacuum, and the non-canonical writings aid in our interpretation not only of many canonical writings, but also of the historical Jesus. The book is divided into three parts: Scripture as the Word of God, Jesus' Exposition of the Old Testament in Luke's Gospel, and the different lists of texts considered 'canonical' that abounded in antiquity. Questions of the origin and transmission of texts are introduced as well as the different lists of texts considered 'canonical' that abounded in antiquity.
