Race-ing Representation
Kostas Myrsiades 1998 This collection takes on the problem of representing race in the context of a master language and the need to redefine the self as speaker. These essays discuss this problem in terms of the ongoing struggle to redefine the self as speaker, that is, to re-construct our understanding of history, sexuality, and speech itself in a continuing battle for self-definition. As a totality, these essays explore the notion of race as a natural boundary and the role of a variety of possible constructions that force us to accept race not as a category, but as a practice. Kostas and Linda Myrsiades have brought to the collection a wide range of perspectives and voices, and the result is that for the first time the voices from the margins of the public discourse—voices such as those of Clarence Thomas hearings, the writers of Salem, the Harlem Renaissance, and the work of Toni Morrison, demonstrating that resistance to race-ing is both meaningfully engaged in the process of political legitimacy and rewritten as a linguistic practice.

Mixed Race Identities in Australia, New Zealand and the Pacific Islands Farida Fozdar 2016-12-08 We offer this book as a Southern Pacific Ocean perspective on the topic of racial hybridity, exploring it through a series of case studies from around the Australia-Pacific region, a region unique as a result of its very particular colonial histories. Focusing on the interaction between “race” and culture, especially in terms of visibility and self-defined identity; and the particular characteristics of political, cultural and social formations in the countries of this region, the book explores the complexity of the mixed race experience, the structural forces of particular colonial and post-colonial environments and political realities, and influences on contemporary identity formation.
