At Home and in the Field Suzanne S. Finney 2015-04-30 Crossing disciplinary boundaries, At Home and in the Field is an anthology of twenty-first century ethnographic research and writing about the global worlds of home and disjuncture in Asia and the Pacific Islands. These stories reveal fresh insights into the lived experience of home and dislocate and unsettle the “homework”—ethnography that directly engages with issues and identities in which the ethnographer finds political solidarity and belonging in fields at home—the “anthology” component of this book offers a compelling alternative to the distinction between “insiders” and “outsiders.” The obligations that fieldwork engenders among researchers and local communities are mobilized by contributors who are often socially engaged with the peoples and places they work. In its focus on Asia and the Pacific Islands, the collection offers ethnographic insights on topics that range from ritual money burning in China to the militarization of Hawai'i to the social roles and performances of identity and difference in local communities.

Corporate Social Responsibility and Natural Resource Conflict Kyle McKeena 2015-10-23 This book examines the possibilities and limitations of corporate social responsibility in minimizing the social and environmental impacts of natural resource extraction. By combining seminal and penetrating empirical analysis, the author skillfully asks why previous corporate social responsibility practices have not always achieved their aims. This theme is explored through an analysis of the most pressing and controversial natural resource projects in the Asia Pacific region: Bougainville (Papua New Guinea) and West Papua (Indonesia). Drawing on first-hand accounts of corporate executives and communities affected by resource conflict, this book provides an in-depth analysis of the ways that current corporate social responsibility initiatives fail and the limits of extractive companies to avoid social conflict. The study concludes that this is attributable to the failure of extractive companies to recognize the full range of social and environmental impacts of project implementations. In order to mitigate the negative social and environmental impacts of project implementations, the book argues that it is essential that extractive companies actively engage with communities and local stakeholders to develop long-term solutions.

The book covers a wide range of topics, from the social and environmental impacts of extractive industry projects to the role of government and civil society in promoting socially responsible practices. It provides a comprehensive analysis of the challenges facing extractive companies in the Asia Pacific region and offers recommendations for ways to improve the effectiveness of corporate social responsibility initiatives. The book is a valuable resource for students, researchers, and practitioners interested in corporate social responsibility and natural resource conflict.

The Melanesian War Eric Hirsch 2019-03-23 This wide-ranging volume captures the diverse ways in which historians and peoples have experienced the conflicts that have shaped Melanesia’s modern history. The book features original research, personal accounts, and reflections from a range of perspectives, including those of soldiers, historians, and communities themselves. It includes case studies of key conflicts, such as the Melanesian War, and explores the broader context of the region’s political and social development. The book covers a wide range of topics, from the social and environmental impacts of extractive industry projects to the role of government and civil society in promoting socially responsible practices. The Politics of Power Denise Leith 2002-10-31 Even as Major General Suharto consolidated his power in the bloodletting of the mid-sixties, Freapport-Mocoham,a the American transnational mining company sign contract with the Indonesian government to supply the first foreign company to do so. Today, in the isolated jungles of West Papua, a region that is increasingly restless under Indonesian rule, Freapport claims to be the world’s largest gold mine and one of its richest and most valuable. Freapport is the largest foreign company to operate in Indonesia. It is a take and detailed look at the changing nature of power relations between the Papuans and the Indonesian military, the traditional landowners (the Amungme and Kamoro), and the environmental and human rights groups. It examines how and why an American company, despite such rigorous domestic state law, was able to operate in West Papua. The book also raises questions about the nature of power in contemporary Indonesia and the way it can shape the political landscape.

The book provides a comprehensive analysis of the challenges facing extractive companies in the Asia Pacific region and offers recommendations for ways to improve the effectiveness of corporate social responsibility initiatives. The book is a valuable resource for students, researchers, and practitioners interested in corporate social responsibility and natural resource conflict.
Nomadic Peoples and Human Rights | Jérôme Gilbert 2014-03-26 Although nomadic peoples are scattered worldwide and have highly heterogeneous lifestyles, they face similar threats to their way of life. This book traces the changing dynamics of central-local relations in Indonesia. Since the fall of Suharto's New Order in 1998, Indonesia has experienced profound political, economic, and social change that has resulted in the dispersion of large numbers of people, leading to an increased awareness of the need to integrate security and development agendas in the field of conflict management. The authors of this book focus on the role of NGOs in the development of the new order and present a comprehensive analysis of the factors that led to the collapse of the Suharto regime. They also provide a detailed account of the political and economic changes that occurred in Indonesia during the 1990s, including the collapse of the Communist Party and the rise of democracy. The book concludes with a discussion of the future of Indonesia and the region, including the role of NGOs in the development of the country.
the sole possession of the West. It provides and provokes a new, international, and post-Western vision of racism for the twenty-first century.

Resort to War

Meredith Reid Sarkees 2010-02-16 This much-anticipated reference book analyzes more than a thousand wars waged from 1816 to 2008 using authoritative, highly standardized, and systematic coding methods from the Correlates of War Project, which aims to reveal the underlying patterns and causes of war. Resort to War lists and categorizes all violent conflicts with 1,000 or more battle deaths and provides an insightful narrative for each struggle.

Merdaka and the Morning Star

Jason Macleod 2015-12-01 An important addition to UQP's internationally acclaimed Peace & Conflict Studies series, West Papua is a secret story. On the western half of the island of New Guinea, hidden from the world, in a place occupied by the Indonesian military since 1963, continues a remarkable nonviolent struggle for national liberation. In Merdeka and the Morning Star, academic Jason MacLeod gives an insider's view of the trajectory and dynamics of civil resistance in West Papua. Here, the indigenous population has staged protests, boycotts, strikes and other nonviolent actions against repressive rule. This is the first in-depth account of civilian-led insurrection in West Papua, a movement that has transitioned from guerrilla warfare to persistent nonviolent resistance. MacLeod analyses several case studies, including tax resistance that pre-dates Gandhi’s Salt March by two decades, worker strikes at the world’s largest gold and copper mine, daring attempts to escape Indonesian rule by dugout canoe, and the collection of a petition in which signing meant to risk being shot dead. Merdeka and the Morning Star is a must-read for all those interested in Indonesia, the Pacific, self-determination struggles and nonviolent ways out of occupation.
