A Commentary on St. Paul's Joseph Agar Beet 2018-12-23 Excerpt from A Commentary on St. Paul's: Epistle to the Galatians This historic light on St. Paul and his surroundings, supported as it is by the united testimony of the writers of the early Church, affords evidence which in all ages has assured all students, even those who have doubted the authorship of other Epistles attributed to him, that at least these four Epistles are from the pen of the Great Apostle. This certainty of authorship gives to these Epistles a special value, even amid the other Epistles bearing St. Paul's name and to those who confidently accept them all as genuine. In harmony with this mutual relation of the Epistles, the three volumes in which I have annotated them form one complete work. I have endeavoured, by tracing the line of thought of these Epistles and by comparing them each with the others and with the Book of Acts, to reproduce the thought and the movements and surroundings of the Apostle of the Gentiles at the noonday of his career. This reproduction I hope to supplement by another volume expounding the profound Epistles written during the seclusion of his first long imprisonment, viz. Those to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon: by a fifth volume comprising both his two earliest and his three latest extant Epistles, viz. Those written during his second missionary tour, to the newly-founded Church at Thessalonica, and those written, as I hope to prove, after his release from his first imprisonment and to conclude the series by a volume expounding St. Paul's teaching as a whole, comparing it with that of the other writers of the New Testament, and tracing the manifold teaching of these various writers to its one immediate source in the Gospel proclaimed by Christ and to its ultimate source in the Eternal Purpose of God. About the 2018-07-05 WHERE IS HISTORY GOING? A CHRISTIAN RESPONSE TO SECULAR PHILOSOPHIES OF HISTORY $12.75 Available: In Stock In a closely reasoned, logical presentation, Dr. Montgomery examines such issues as: Where is History Going? / What Does a Historian Know About Jesus Christ? / The Divinity of Jesus Christ / Karl Barth and Contemporary Theology of History / Tillich's Philosophy of History / Gordon Clark's Historical Philosophy / Toward a Christian Philosophy of History. Dr. Montgomery thoroughly documents his conclusions on the basis of a wide range of authorities, and concludes that the only valid approach to history is from the Christian perspective - the authority of God, His Son, and His Word.

Excerpt from A Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans Of commentaries published since the first appearance of this work in 1877, I may mention that of Godet, published in 1879, ‘80, marked by keen insight into the apostle's meaning and great charm of style, but not always reliable in grammatical and critical details and that of Oltramare, published in 1881, ‘82, careful and scholarly, especially in grammar, but, as I think, less in harmony with the thought of Paul. These works we owe to French Switzerland, their writers having been professors at Lausanne and Geneva respectively. Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans (Classic Reprint) F. Godet 2016-07-23 Excerpt from Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans Coleridge calls the Epistle to the Romans the profoundest book in existence. Chrysostom had it read to him twice a week. Luther, in his famous preface, says This Epistle is the chief book of the New Testament, the purest gospel. It deserves not only to be known word for word by every Christian, but to be the subject of his meditation day by day, the daily bread of his soul. The more time one Spends on it, the more precious it becomes and the better it appears. Melanchthon, in order to make it perfectly his own, copied it twice with his own hand. It is the book which he expounded most frequently in his lectures. The Reformation was undoubtedly the work of the Epistle to the Romans, as well as of that to the Galatians; and the probability is that every great Spiritual revival in the church will be connected as effect and cause with a deeper understanding of this book. This observation unquestionably applies to the various religious awakenings which have successively marked the course of our century. The exposition of such a book is capable of boundless progress. In studying the Epistle to the Romans we feel ourselves at every word face to face with the unfathomable. Our experience is somewhat analogous to what we feel when contemplating the great masterpieces of mediaeval architecture, such, for example, as the Cathedral of Milan. We do not know which to admire most, the majesty of the whole or the finish of the details, and every look makes the discovery of some new perfection. And yet the excellence of the book with which we are about to be occupied should by no means discourage the expositor; it is much rather fitted to stimulate him. What book of the New Testament, says Meyer, in his preface to the fifth edition of his commentary, less entitles the expositor to spare his pains than this, the greatest and richest of all the apostolic works? Only it must not be imagined that to master its meaning nothing more is needed than the philological analysis of the text, or even the theological study of the contents. The true understanding of this masterpiece of the apostolic mind is reserved for those who approach it with the heart described by Jesus in His Sermon on the Mount, the heart hungering and thirsting after righteousness. For what is the Epistle to the Romans? The offer of the righteousness of God to the man who finds himself stripped by the law of his own righteousness (i. To understand such a book we must yield ourselves to the current of the intention under

Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, Vol. 1 (Classic Reprint) F. Godet 2017-10-12 Excerpt from Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, Vol. 1

Sacred criticism, which prepares for the exposition of the books of the Bible, has for its object to elucidate the various questions relating to their origin; and of those questions there are always some which can only be resolved with the help of the exegesis itself. The problem of the composition of the Epistle to the Romans includes several questions of this kind. We could not answer them in this introduction without anticipating the work of exegesis. It will be better, therefore, to defer the final solution of them to the concluding chapter of the commentary. But there are others the solution of which is perfectly obvious, either from the simple reading of the Epistle, or from certain facts established by church history. It cannot be other than advantageous to the exposition to gather together here the results presented by these two sources, which are fitted to shed light on the origin of our Epistle. It will afford an opportunity at the same time of explaining the different views on the subject which have arisen in the course of ages.

Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians (Classic Reprint) John Macpherson 2018-03-08
Excerpt from Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians History. Of Ephesus is lost in an extremely remote antiquity. In the eleventh century before Christ, Androcclus, son of the Athenian Codrus, is said to have established a Greek colony there, but at a still earlier period Phoenician emigrants seem to have been attracted to it on account of its convenient situation, and to have contributed largely to its material prosperity. Their presence soon made itself felt, by impressing a special stamp upon the habits and customs of the place, and may account for many of the social and religious practices which came to be regarded as characteristic of its culture. The natural situation of the town, within easy reach from behind of the great producing districts of the time, and favoured with a conveniently central position that allowed ready egress toward Greece and Italy on the one hand, and toward the ports of the Eastern Mediterranean on the other, insured to it commercial prosperity, and steady growth in population and in political importance. The enterprising Phoenician traders would find it less difficult to effect a settlement there, inasmuch as the deities whom they worshipped were the same as, or at least very similar to, those of the earlier inhabitants of the land, and the religious modes of thought prevalent among both peoples in general harmonised. The priesthood.

Saint Paul's Epistle to the Romans Dmitri Royster 2008
Written with the average lay reader in mind, this pastoral commentary on the Epistle to the Romans offers readers a clear explanation of the Apostle Paul's influential and controversial letter. Quotations from church fathers and parallel expressions from Scripture create a methodology consistent with Orthodox tradition. By also using hymns and texts from the Orthodox liturgical services, the author supplies deeper and broader contexts for familiar biblical verses. Appropriate for personal and group biblical study and for spiritual guidance and edification, this volume also serves as a useful aid to pastors in teaching and preparation of homilies.

Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, Vol. 2 of 2 (Classic Reprint)
Friedrich Adolph Philippi 2015-07-19 Excerpt from Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, Vol. 2 of 2
The apostle has now developed the doctrine of sanctification, vi - viii. 17, under all its aspects. As the doctrine took as its point of departure the doctrine of justification, so it has returned back to it; for the Spirit of sanctification, dwelling in us, is Himself the witness to our adoption which is acquired through justification, and therewith at the same time the security and pledge of the inheritance of life. And they who by faith are in Christ Jesus... have to look for this life only hereafter, or in the future state, or only when Christ, with whom our life is hid in God, and who is Himself our life, shall be revealed in glory, Col. iii. 3, 4. Thus the righteousness of Christ and life of Christ as to their beginnings no doubt already exist richly in us in a subjective form, but in their completeness both one and the other ever subsist objectively in Him alone, and remain for us still an object of faith, not of sight. Martin Luther's Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians (1535) Martin Luther 2018-04-23 Martin Luther's most comprehensive work on justification by faith, his commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians is translated and edited from the Latin into a lively style, paralleling his spoken lectures. Combined with the passion and faith expressed in these lectures, the biblical foundation for the crucial doctrine of justification is underscored and expressed to a new audience. The commentary is also a historical document, a recording of a professor in a classroom in 1531 from July to December of that year, which expresses the Reformer's commitment to the good news of Jesus' death in the sinner's place, challenging the reader/hearer to compare St. Paul's theology with what he/she hears in the church today.
