Acid Precipitation Sensitivity of Canada's Atlantic Provinces
T. A. Clair 1982

"The proper management and study of freshwater resources in Atlantic Canada require the identification of the parts of the region that are the most sensitive to loadings of acids and also require knowledge of present pH levels. This report identifies the areas of Atlantic Canada in which resources are susceptible to damage.
Regional high grade metamorphism (Granulite-facies), anorthosites, etc. They are separated by the Caledonian orogeny and, above all, by the Atlantic Ocean. During the time of the great continental drift controversy, few people were ready to admit that both sides on the Atlantic were once an unique province. Now everybody agrees on the Post-paleozoic age of the Atlantic and, consequently, on the intrinsic homogeneity of the much older rocks which occur around it. But a detailed comparison is not easy. The Grenville Province is much larger than South Scandinavia, both regions have been investigated by a great number of different schools, using various methods, approaches and concepts. After several attempts, and long discussion, it was felt by a small group of individuals, that literature study would not be enough and that nothing could replace the direct contact, in the field, of specialists who had a first hand knowledge of all involved regions. The formula of a NATO Advanced Study Institute, which gives a unique opportunity to meet and mix people of various origin and levels, came almost by itself. Much work was needed, much help has been obtained, as detailed in the "Acknowledgements".

Color photos. Trade and Investment Across the Northeast Boundary Institute for Research on Public Policy 1986 From the back cover: In exploring some of the economic linkages among New England, Quebec, and the Atlantic Provinces, as well as their implications, this study contributes to the ongoing debate surrounding free trade. Long-time trading partners, these regions, are adjusting to the rapidly expanding trade across the northeast Canada-U.S. boundary. In particular, the flows of energy, fishery products, and interregional investments are undergoing far-reaching changes, with all the parties taking measures to protect their own best interests. Thus, these flows are examined closely, within the context of historic interregional trade relations and regional demographic and labour market characteristics.
